

JOURNALS UNLIMITED

When I was twelve, I won a prize for selling the most Girl Scout cookies--a diary. I usually wait for the perfect moment to use new possessions, which could be years, but for some reason, I availed myself of this one right away.

Boy, am I glad I did. I tell every girl now that they should keep one, and for grown-ups, who feel funny writing in a "diary," to keep a "journal." Actually, they're not just for females; my father kept one since his twenties, and I read them all when he passed away a few years ago. Very enlightening. What he wrote is fodder for MY journals.

So, when I noticed these themed Journals Unlimited at the Haven House Oscar Suites in February, I had to stop to peruse them. They're brilliant! In this day and age of super-short attention spans, these journals give you the topics to write about and the sub-categories, as well. You barely have to think. But you get to create memories.

They feature over fifty titles and have something for everyone, including Vacations, Prayers, Recipes, and Birthdays. I wish they had these around when I was a teen-ager; I had to make my own for all the Sweet 16s I attended.

They come in three sizes, but I've always been about minis, as we can tell from the length of my skirts. They're cute and easy to fit anywhere. Now, if I could just get some of my absent-minded friends to carry a Journal Unlimited, I wouldn't have to be the one to remind them of everything that happened in THEIR lives; I'm too busy recording my own experiences.
